

CONTRIBUTORS

---

JUSTINE BROWN is a doctoral candidate in English at the University of Toronto and author of All Possible Worlds: Utopian Experiments in British Columbia.

KEITH CARLSON works as a historian for the Stó:lō Nation and pursues a number of independent research interests, including those that led to his article in this issue.

CRAIG DAVIS is a professor in the Department of Community and Regional Planning at UBC.

ROBERT T. GALOIS is an adjunct professor in the Department of Geography at UBC, and author of a recent book on Kwakwaka'wakw settlement.

R. C. (BOB) HARRIS is a retired engineer and a close student of the early cartography of BC.

PATRICK LANE is an internationally-known BC poet whose most recent book of poetry is Too Spare, Too Fierce.

KEVIN PAUL is a young Saanich poet whose work is attracting wide interest.