

CONTRIBUTORS

ARN KEELING, a SSHRC postdoctoral fellow at the University of Saskatchewan, recently completed his PhD in geography at the University of British Columbia. He studies B.C. and Western Canadian environmental history and historical geography.

LINDA KENDALL is currently a member of the Western Canada Wilderness Committee and also a member of EarthSave Toastmasters, the only Toastmasters club with an environmental focus. Her passions, in addition to writing, are reading and organic gardening. Although she has lived in Vancouver for much of her adult life, she is currently in the process of moving back to the Arrow Lakes Valley, the only place that has ever felt like "home."

TINA LOO is a Canada Research Chair in the Department of History at the University of British Columbia, where she teaches environmental history. She is currently completing a manuscript dealing with wildlife conservation in twentieth century Canada and researching the social and environmental impact of hydroelectric dams as well as other high modernist projects.

JAMES MURTON is a SSHRC Postdoctoral Fellow in the Department of Geography at UBC. His article in this issue is drawn from his Ph.D. dissertation, which he is currently preparing for publication.

HEATHER MYERS is an associate professor in International Studies and Coordinator of Northern Studies at the University of Northern British Columbia.

TRACY SUMMERVILLE is an assistant professor of political science at the University of Northern British Columbia.

JOHN THISTLE is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Geography at the University of British Columbia.

JEREMY WILSON is a professor in the Political Science Department at the University of Victoria. His research and teaching interests include environmental policy and politics, and the Canadian policy-making process. Recent publications have appeared in the Journal of International Wildlife Law and Policy, and Canadian-American Public Policy.

GRAEME WYNN is a professor of geography at the University of British Columbia. He has long been interested in the interactions between humans and environments and his work has helped shape the field of environmental history in Canada. Much of his early work was on eastern Canada, but he has also written extensively on New Zealand and is the co-editor (with T.R. Oke) of Vancouver and Its Region (UBC Press, 1992). His current projects include major studies of Canadian environmental history and the peopling of British North America, and he is the General Editor of the Nature/History/ Society series published by UBC Press.

FRANK ZELKO completed his Ph.D. in environmental history at the University of Kansas in 2003. He is currently a research fellow in environmental history at the German Historical Institute in Washington DC and a lecturer in U.S. history at the University of Queensland, Australia. He is completing a book about the history of Greenpeace, based on his doctoral dissertation, which will be published by Rowman & Littlefield in 2005.