

CALL FOR PROPOSALS

BC Studies Conference, Thompson Rivers University,

May 2-4, 2019

Intersections: Peoples and Places in British Columbia

Thompson Rivers University is proud to host the international, multidisciplinary BC Studies Conference on the theme of Intersections: Peoples and Places in British Columbia, May 2-4, 2019. Thompson Rivers University is located in the beautiful city of Kamloops, on the Tk'emlúps te Secwépemc Territory that is situated in the Southern interior of British Columbia within the unceded traditional lands of the Secwépemc Nation. We extend our honour and gratitude to the Secwépemc Nation for welcoming us on their traditional territory

We are pleased to invite proposals for panels and papers on all areas of research on British Columbia, including those that address intersections within and between peoples and places throughout the province. We welcome submissions from scholars working in all fields, including the arts and humanities, law, education, social work, and the natural and social sciences. We especially encourage proposals that focus on marginalized peoples and/or places, and that explore relatively understudied or overlooked aspects of British Columbia's past, present, and future. Proposals from Indigenous researchers are particularly welcomed, as are submissions from graduate students and community-based scholars.

Panels, roundtables, or workshops: Proposals for panels, roundtables, or workshops should include a title, brief description (150 words) of the session theme, brief abstract (50 words) for each presentation, and a one-page CV for each presenter.

Individual papers: Individual paper proposals should include a title, brief abstract (250 words), and a one-page CV.

Posters: Proposals for posters should include a title, brief description (100 words), and a one-page CV.

Deadline for submissions: December 1, 2018.
