

CONTRIBUTORS

SEAN KHERAJ teaches in the Department of History at the University of Toronto. This fall he will begin a Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada Postdoctoral Research Fellowship in the Department of History at the University of British Columbia. This article is based on a portion of his dissertation titled, "Inventing Nature's Past: An Environmental History of Stanley Park." Currently, he is working on a new project on the history of animals in the urban environment in Canada. He recently published an article in the Canadian Historical Review, titled "Restoring Nature: Ecology, Memory, and the Storm History of Vancouver's Stanley Park," which was awarded the 2007 CHR Prize.

JASON R. LACHARITE is a lecturer in the Department of Political Science at the University of Northern British Columbia. He has written extensively on the impact of globalization and Internet technologies on the regulatory powers of the state in Canada, Australia, and China. He is also interested in the extent to which internet technologies can be used to improve or strengthen 'democracy' in Canada.

DANA LEPOFSKY is interested in the development of complex societies and the interaction between socio-economic and environmental changes within these societies. Her recent research focuses on complex hunter-gatherers of the Pacific Northwest of North America. A major component of her research is documenting the intensification of plant food production, its effects on the environment, and its relationship to social changes.

MICHAEL VANCE is Associate Professor of History at Saint Mary's University, Halifax, Nova Scotia. Along with his co-editor, Scott McLean, he has just completed an annotated edition of the unpublished memoir of the Scottish-Canadian poet and clergyman, Rev. William Wye Smith.