

CONTRIBUTORS

ANDREA GEIGER is an assistant professor of history at Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, BC. Her dissertation, “Cross-Pacific Dimensions of Race, Caste and Class: Meiji-era Immigrants in the North American West, 1885-1928,” was completed at the University of Washington in Seattle in 2006 and awarded the Institute for Pacific Northwest Studies Dissertation Prize in 2007.

LISA ROSE MAR is an assistant professor jointly appointed in the Department of History and in the Asian American Studies Program at the University of Maryland, College Park. Her research explores immigration history in Canada, America, and the Chinese Diaspora. She is currently completing a book about transformations in Chinese Canadians’ relations with their neighbors between the 1880s and the 1940s.

RENISA MAWANI is an assistant professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of British Columbia. She has published in the areas of moral regulation; (post)colonialism, law, and space; histories of Chinese migration to British Columbia; and on colonial histories of Aboriginal peoples. Her publications have appeared in journals including Law/Text/Culture, Social and Legal Studies, Canadian Journal of Law and Society, and Social Identities. She has just completed her first book, Cartographies of Colonialism: Crossracial Contacts, Juridical Truths, and Biopolitical Futures in Historical British Columbia (under review). Her second monograph (in progress) is a transnational history of the Komagata Maru and its place in the British Empire.

JOHN PRICE is an associate professor of history at the University of Victoria, BC, where he has taught on Japan, East Asia, and Asia-Canada relations for the past ten years. His recent manuscript, 'Orienting' Canada: Race, Empires and the TransPacific, 1937-1956 (forthcoming), examines Canada-Asia relations in the context of wars in the Pacific, Korea, and Vietnam.

TIMOTHY J. STANLEY is Vice-Dean (Academic Programs) of the Faculty of Education, University of Ottawa, where he teaches antiracism education and educational foundations. The history of anti-Chinese racism in British Columbia is his principal area of research interest. Recent publications include a chapter on racisms and Canadian nationalist grand narratives in Ruth Sandwell (ed.), Teaching History in Troubled Times: Public Memory, Citizenship and History Education in Canada (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2006).

YUEN-FONG WOON is a sociologist trained at the University of British Columbia. She is currently teaching in the Department of Pacific and Asian Studies, University of Victoria. She is the author of two books and twenty-two articles, most of which are based on numerous rounds of field work in the Pearl River Delta region, South China, as well as oral history projects on early Chinese men and women in Vancouver and Victoria.

HENRY YU is an associate professor in the History Department and the Director of the Initiative for Student Teaching and Research in Chinese Canadian Studies (<http://www.instrcc.ubc.ca>) at the University of British Columbia. Professor Yu received his BA from the University of British Columbia, and his MA and PhD in History from Princeton University. His book Thinking Orientals: Migration, Contact, and Exoticism in Modern America (New York: Oxford University Press, 2001) received the Norris and Carol Hundley Prize for the Most Distinguished Book for 2001 from the American Historical Association Pacific Coast Branch.