

CONTRIBUTORS

---

DIANNE NEWELL is a professor of history and director of the Peter Wall Institute for Advanced Studies at the University of British Columbia. A specialist in the socio-economic history of technology, she has published extensively on Canada's Pacific coast fisheries, including: Tangled Webs of History: Indians and the Law in Canada's Pacific Coast Fisheries (University of Toronto Press, 1993).

GABRIELA Pechlaner is a doctoral candidate in sociology at Simon Fraser University. Her current research investigates the advent of biotechnology in agriculture, focusing on changes to control over food production and on the lawsuits emerging around the technology.

MURRAY B. RUTHERFORD is an assistant professor in the School of Resource and Environmental Management at Simon Fraser University, where he does research on environmental policy and planning. His co-edited book Coexisting with Large Carnivores: Lessons from Greater Yellowstone was recently published by Island Press.

JUDITH SALTMAN is associate professor at the School of Library, Archival & Information Studies, the University of British Columbia. Her publications include Modern Canadian Children's Books, The New Republic of Childhood: A Critical Guide to Canadian Children's Literature in English (with Sheila Egoff), and The Riverside Anthology of Children's Literature.

DOROTHEE SCHREIBER, an environmental scientist, completed her PhD in 2003 in the Department of Resource Management and Environment at the University of British Columbia. In 2004, she took up a Social Sciences and Humanities Council of Canada postdoctoral fellowship in the Department of Anthropology, McGill University. She has published three research papers, two in international journals on aboriginal research, and a fourth, collaboratively with Dianne Newell, "Why Spend a Lot of Time Dwelling on the Past?: Understanding Resistance to Contemporary Salmon Farming in Kwakwaka'wakw Territory," in Arif Dirlik, ed., Pedagogies of the Global: Knowledge in the Human Interest.

ROBERT SCOTT B.A., LL.B., graduated from the University of Victoria, Faculty of Law, in 2005 and currently works at the law firm of Berge, Hart & Cassels in Victoria, British Columbia. He has been involved in numerous research projects concerning natural resource and land use issues in British Columbia.

CHRIS TOLLEFSON is an associate professor at the Faculty of Law, University of Victoria and Executive Director of the University of Victoria Environmental Law Centre. He has published on a range of environmental and resource law topics particularly in relation to Indigenous rights issues.